Render unto Caesar

Catholic teaching holds that the State and the Church have a proper relationship, and inasmuch as both are concerned for the wellbeing of their citizens, their rightful tasks are deeply intertwined. The Church is concerned for the spiritual soul of man, the State to safeguard temporal matters. Because those things are not separate — man is not civilized if he rejects God — the character of that relationship is complex, much too complex to go into here. But by reviewing the counter-theories we might shed some light on the true relationship:

A – Absolute Liberalism: All rights come from the state. The Church has no rights except those granted by the state, and the State is under no obligation to allow the Church to exist at all.

B - Qualified Liberalism: The Church has a right to exist, but the State is not subservient to the Church in any way. Essentially 'A' but with better optics and more regard, shall we say, for the religiously inclined.

C - Regalism: The Church has a right to exist, but the State holds an iron grip on its reins. Furthermore, the State may demand, at any moment, that the Church use her full influence to promote the State's interests.

The Church, of course, rejects those counter-theories because our one true King is Jesus Christ. But what is it called when the Church, through her own offices, ties herself to the interests of a State that rejects the Kingship of God? When her leadership invites to the wedding feast politicians wet with the blood of infants? Or turns a blind eye to the evil of homosexuality even as it rampages through her clergy? Or supports politically contentious, unprovable but fashionable theories involving environment, weather, and population? Or uses her moral influence to abet the State in mandating the use of experimental drugs on a skeptical or unwilling population? What do we call that?

The Book of the Apocalypse spells out, in a couple of awe-inspiring chapters, the wrongful merging of State and Church, chapters that antagonistic protestants have long used to condemn the Catholic Church. John Gill, 18th century British Baptist and theologian, will serve as an example:

"The ten kings, who being of the same mind, and of one religion, the Popish religion, gave their power, strength, and kingdom to the beast, and have been enticed by the whore of Rome to commit spiritual fornication with her; ten kings, who being of the same mind, and of one religion, the Popish religion, gave their power, strength, and kingdom to the beast..."[and so forth].

Gill let protestant-Christianity off the hook because, I suppose, he expected it to be more pure; but is the current Vatican administration, with its fascination with one-world government and socialist economic sentiments, trying to validate Gill's point?

"Separation of Church and State" liberals parrot, but that is neither what they mean nor what they want. By soft-peddalling the truth, liberal churchmen are creating a de facto partisan and liberal church with roots deep in the politics of the woke New World Order, a single nation State with absolute power over the rights of man, one that uses the Church to placate man's need for religion but that supports the desires of the State by censoring the true and infinitely beautiful voice of Jesus Christ.

This is a profoundly dangerous turn of events; and yet... "Let us be glad and rejoice, and give glory to Him!" All men are sinners, whereas Jesus Christ is the King Of Kings, Lord Of Lords. We know that whatever happens, we are in the right place. St. John, upon hearing the prophetic destruction of "mystery Babylon," and standing in awe of the hosts of Heaven, was commanded by an angel:

Write: 'Blessed are they that are called to the marriage supper of the Lamb.' And he saith to me: 'These words of God are true' (Apocalypse 19:9).

Catechism of the Catholic Church

Prior to the second Vatican Council the sacrament known as the Anointing of the Sick was most commonly referred to as Extreme Unction. The word extreme was used because the sacrament was almost exclusively conferred on someone in an extreme physical condition, usually near the point of death due to illness, an accident, or old age. The word unction was used to indicate that the person who received the sacrament was anointed by the priest with blessed oil.

The Church now uses Anointing of the Sick to describe the sacrament, having moved away from the idea that this sacrament is only for those near death. It can be administered when a member of the faithful begins to be in danger due to grave illness or old age. One of the obvious problems people face if they wait to call a priest until the sick person was actually dying is that there is a real possibility the person would die before being anointed. My Catholic Faith points out that “Thousands die each year without the benefit of the sacrament of Extreme Unction. If our faith means anything to us, it should teach us that the moment of death is of supreme importance. It may decide whether we should be forever with God in heaven, or whether we shall suffer eternally in hell” (pg. 324). Extreme Unction is a sacrament of the living which means a person must be in the state of grace before receiving the sacrament. Therefore, it is customary to go to confession prior to receiving the sacrament unless one is unable to do so. The closer a person is to death, the less likely confession would be possible. Holy Viaticum (the Eucharist) is usually given after the Anointing, and as always, this too requires the person to be in the state of grace. These sacraments together is part of what the Church calls the Last Sacraments or Last Rites.

Next week we shall review the effects of this sacrament.
